Discussion about the current project of SWAM "Enhancing labour conditions and occupational safety and health as a support to the countries from the Western Balkan toward accessing European Union" occupational health and safety as the fifth category of fundamental principles and rights at work, and the state of occupational health and safety in Montenegro.

At the International Labour Conference (ILC) on June 10, a resolution was adopted to add the principle of a safe and healthy working environment to the fundamental principles and rights at work of the International Labour Organization (ILO).

Until now, there have been four categories of fundamental principles and rights at work:

- Freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining;
- The elimination of all forms of forced or compulsory labour;
- The abolition of child labour;
- The elimination of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation.

Occupational health and safety has now become the fifth category. Member states of the ILO, regardless of their level of economic development, are obliged to respect and promote these principles and rights, whether or not they have ratified the relevant conventions.
